The above photograph is a panoramic view of the Marine Corps East Coast Expeditionary Force making camp in East Potomac Park, Washington, D. C., Monday, June 19, while enroute from Quantico, Va., to Gettysburg, Pa., where maneuvers will be held on the anniversaries of the Battle of Gettysburg.

MARINE COLUMN APPROACHING OBJECTIVE IN MARCH TO GETTYSBURG BATTLE GROUND

The Marine Corps East Coast Expeditionary Force under command of Brigadier General Smedley D. Butler, is now within striking distance of Gettysburg, after a march of four days from Washington, D. C., simulating in every respect wartime conditions with advance guards and scouting parties continually protecting the main column from the attack of enemy forces.

With hovering planes following the line of advance and couriers keeping in communication with the base, the column advanced day by day in easy stages along the historic route of the Federal Army's march into Pennsylvania, where, beginning July 1, 1863, the famous Battle of Gettysburg took place.

This same battle will be refought by the Marines under modern battle conditions, though the troops will first emulate Pickett's famous charge as nearly as possible as it took place on that memorable day in July in '63.

The complete force of Marines left Quantico, Va., early Monday morning, the infantry regiments coming to Washington, D. C., by barge and the artillery and tanks and motor equipment by road.

Monday evening the infantry and machine gun companies passed in review before the President of the United States and his official family and friends, members of Congress and high ranking Army and Navy officials on the White House grounds. This review preceded a review of the troops in honor of Acting Secretary of the Navy Theodore Roosevelt on the Elipse in Potomac Park, south of the White House, which was witnessed by thousands of Washingtonians and visitors to the National Capital.

Early Tuesday morning the column swung out from its camp in East Potomac Park, headed by its band of 134 pieces, on the first leg of the march to Gettysburg. The first day's march, 12½ miles to Bethesda, Md., was easy sailing for the hardened and weather-beaten Marines, and they witnessed a moving picture show of the review the day before, on the Corby estate just outside of Bethesda, where the camp was made. These pictures were made and developed by Marine Corps and Navy photographers and were rushed out to the camp after completion so the Marines could have a view of themselves as they passed before the President and Acting Secretary of the Navy the evening before.

Wednesday night the column stacked arms just beyond Gaithersburg, Md., and the men pitched their shelter tents for the night.

Early Friday morning the column, two miles in length, again got in motion toward Ridgeville, where camp was made that night.

Saturday morning saw the brigade swinging off almost in a westerly direction toward Frederick, Md., a town of historic interest for its part in the Civil War. Here on the famous Frederick Fair Grounds the Marines encamped for the stay over Saturday and Sunday to be rested and refreshed and ready to start out early Monday morning for Thurmont.

The first camp in which the Marines were Quartered was called Camp Lejeune in honor of Major General John A. Lejeune, Commandant of the Marine Corps and leader of the Famous Second Division in France.

The second camp, that at Bethesda, Md., was called Camp Neville in honor of Major General Wendell C. Neville, U. S. M. C.

Camp Richards was the name selected for the camp at Gaithersburg, Md., in honor of Brigadier General George Richards of the Marine Corps.

It is the intention to name each camp after some distinguished general of the Marine Corps and the final camp will be called Camp Harding in honor of President Warren G. Harding.

The country in which the force now lies teems with history. It was in this region that the Braddock expedition traveled on its march to Fort Duquesne in the French and Indian war. During the first invasion of Maryland by the Confederate army in 1863, the Federal troops marched through here to Fredericksburg. During the advance on Gettysburg in June, 1863, a part of the Confederate cavalry, under Gen. J. E. B. Stuart, came through. The army of Gen. Lee returned southward out of the Shenandoah valley in the spring of 1864 through this country.

Tentative Program

June 19—(a) All motorized units and trains and 10th Regiment march from Quantico, halting that night at bridge across Potomac River. (Route: Quantico, Woodbridge, Pohick, Telegraph Road, Alexandria, Alexandria-Washington Road.) (b) Infantry units leave Quantico, Va., by water, arrive Municipal Fish Wharf, Water Street, Washington, D. C., about noon, march via Water Street northwest then south to camp site at Potomac Park. In afternoon these units parade in the "Ellipse," south of White House.

June 20—(a) 10th Regiment crosses Potomac River Bridge at dawn. (b) All units march in early morning through Washington (from Potomac Park across bridge to 14th Street; north on 14th Street to B Street N. W.; west on B Street to 17th Street; north on 17th Street to Pennsylvania Avenue; west on Pennsylvania Avenue to 21st Street; north on 21st Street to Massachusetts Avenue; northwest on Massachusetts Avenue to Wisconsin Avenue; north on Wisconsin Avenue to Rockville).

June 20 to 26—Column en route by marching to Gettysburg, Pa., via Bethesda, Rockville, Gaithersburg, Ridgeville, Frederick.

June 27—Cleaning up and resting.

June 28 to 30—Mornings: Headquarters troops and 2 battalions maneuvers for exercise in communication and command; 2 battalions visit battlefield; 2 battalions exercise on training field. Afternoons: All units rehearse "Pickett's Charge" and the modern attack formation. Evenings (7:00 p. m.): Parade.

July 1—10th Regiment and Expeditionary Force troops visit battlefield; pay day; baseball games, and evening parade.

July 2—Church parade.

July 3 (3:00 p. m.)—"Pickett's Charge."

July 4 (morning)—"Modern Attack."

July 5—Cleaning up and preparing for return march.

July 6—Return march over same route as the march up.

APPEAL TO SOUVENIR COLLECTORS

The American Legion national headquarters, co-operating with the French authorities, is requesting every member of the American Expeditionary Forces who may have carried away a fragment of historic Rheims Cathedral in France as a souvenir, to send it back to Rheims.

GETTYSBURG

Gettysburg, Gettysburg!
Honor the name of it,
Think of the fame of it,
Ground that was hallowed in Civil War days.

Gettysburg, Gettysburg,
Place where the Blue and Gray
Struggled to win the day,
Soldiers, who nations remember and praise.

Gettysburg, Gettysburg!
Where the grim legions broke,
Fought through the battle smoke,
Man to man fighting where neither would yield.

Gettysburg, Gettysburg,
Sons of the North and South
Fought at the cannon's mouth,
Spreading their blood on that battle-torn field.

Gettysburg, Gettysburg!
Nations have bowed to it,
We're mighty proud of it,
Altar of lives men were willing to give.
Gettysburg, Gettysburg,
Place where our fathers died,
Hallowed and sanctified,
Shedding their blood that Our Nation might live.

Casualties at Gettysburg

During the three days the Blue and the Gray fought at Gettysburg (July 1-3, 1863), the Federal Army lost 3,072 killed, 14,497 wounded, and 5,434 captured or missing, according to figures given in the International Encyclopedia. The Confederate Army, according to official reports, which, however, have been called in question, lost 2,592 killed, 12,709 wounded, and 5,150 captured or missing. The battle has been regarded as the turning point of the Civil War.

The Rand-McNally figures for 1921 give the population of Gettysburg as 4,439. The town will, presumably, have double that population when the Marines are there.

Mostly on Foot

"It's not so far to Gettysburg,"
Said Private Smith one day.
Then Private Brown turned round to ask,
"How do you get that way?"

He Changed His Mind

Mark Twain was called upon to speak at a club, and took for his subject, "Honesty." He said that when he was a boy at home he one day saw a cart of melons. He was a boy, and tempted; besides, he liked melons.

"I sneaked up to that cart," said Mark, "and stole a melon. I went into the alley to devour it. But—I did no sooner set my teeth into it than I paused; a strange feeling came over me. I came to a quick conclusion. Firmly, I walked up to the cart, replaced the melon and—took a ripe one.—The Silent Partner.

Remarked in Passing

In order to make a hit with the modern flapper you have to spend something more than your time.

There is many a short skate who is ready to condemn the short skirt.

It's a wise Marine who knows enough to make a "home run" if he don't intend to ship over.

The Russians will never be able to get along without money. Even when Noah went on the Ark he took along at least "one buck."

Add to the list of eternal questions: "Heard anything about the Pay Bill lately?"

ASTONISHED THE NATIVE

No doubt the Marines on their hike to Gettysburg will literally make a "clean sweep" of the country. The well-known habit of the Marines to make, keep and leave things clean needs no advertising on this page. However, it is interesting to learn the impression these cleanly habits make on those whom the Marines happen to fall in with while on a hike.

During the fall maneuvers at Wilderness nearly a year ago, the itinerary called for a stay at Fredericksburg. The Marines, about 3,500 strong, camped overnight in a park. "Dog tents" were pitched, chow was prepared, and the ground was occupied for about ten or twelve hours. Next morning, after the customary routine, the little army departed.

An old Fredericksburg citizen afterwards remarked to a Marine Corps Sergeant. "I never saw anything like it in my life. The Marines left the camping ground in an absolutely immaculate condition. There was not a scrap of paper or a bit of debris anywhere. In fact, there was absolutely nothing to indicate that nearly 3,500 men had camped there the night before. I actually rubbed my eyes and tried to visualize the small army that had been there a few hours previously, and I had to force my imagination to the utmost to believe it."

The only persons who might possibly be afraid a large body of Marines will "muss things up" on a camping ground, are those who have never had Marines dwelling in their midst. After one such visit the most rabid anti-militarist is usually cured of that delusion.

ON THE TRAIL OF CASABIANCA

CHAPTER IV

Synopsis: It doesn't look as if Dave was ever going to ship over. In fact, it doesn't look as if he'd get a chance to finish his current enlistment. Dave is in Dutch. Fifi's in Dutch, and Casabianca is still free to roam the wilds of Haiti. Both Dave and Fifi are in the clutches of the voodoo worshippers. Will they escape the torture that is planned for them? Ah! Who knows? Who knows? Let's go.

The voodoo worshippers moved deeper into the woods. Dave again lapsed into unconsciousness. Fifi's heart almost stood still when she saw his inanimate form stretched on the rude litter. She stumbled wearily ahead, when her captors released their grip, knowing that she could not escape.

Bit by bit Fifi caught the story of Dave's rescue from the chattering natives. After the shipwreck, Dave, bruised and buffeted, had been tossed on the beach by a giant wave. Casabianca, too, had been among those who had escaped death and he was even now following the trail.

A voice spoke to Fifi in a tone that was almost a hiss. She turned quickly and saw Casabianca.

"So," sneered the bandit. "It is here I find you, my fickle Fifi. You follow the Americano. It is he who is first in your heart."

He laughed bitterly. His voice was charged with hatred.

"You shall see the handsome Dave boiled in oil. You will hear his dying shrieks and be unable to aid him. You shall see how traitors die who dare to oppose the mighty Casabianca."

Fifi shrank from him in horror. The party paused before the altar of the voodoos in the heart of the forest. Dave, still unconscious, was dropped rudely to the ground.

The natives prepared a huge bonfire. It was soon surmounted by a steaming cauldron. Natives writhed, danced, and cavorted in the fantastic shadows of the firelight, as a beginning to the barbaric ceremonies of the voodoo.

A priest stepped from the voodoo temple, a rude hut upon which was scrolled in hieroglyphics, which Fifi could not understand, the sacred legends of the voodoo rites.

The priest was clothed in a flowing robe, on the front of which the Sacred Serpent was a conspicuous figure. In his hand he carried a spiked club. He stepped to the fire, mumbled something, and cast in a powder that gave out a pale blue flame.

Fifi's mind was busy with plans for an escape.

The chanting grew louder. Dave awoke.

"Fifi," he whispered.
"Hush, Dave," she replied. "I have recovered your rifle. It lies by your side. Don't move until I give the signal, then follow me. Your life is in danger. These brutes intend to boil you in oil. We are in the hands of the voodoos."

Dave's strength almost left him. For the first time he wished he had his old billet as messman at Pearl Harbor.

As he felt the stock of his trusty Springfield, it gave him new power. Then he remembered that the rifle had jammed . . . He was powerless in the hands of his enemies. . . .

For a moment he thought he was lost.

JUNE, THE MARINES' MONTH

June is marked down in the history of the Marine Corps as the "Red Letter Month" and it is indeed a month of anniversaries of events that went toward the making of world history.

On June 14, 1917, the first American expeditionary force left the United States for France and the Fifth Regiment of Marines on the Naval Transports Henderson and Hancock and the auxiliary cruiser De Kalb formed one-fifth of it.

On June 27, 1917, the first battalion of the Fifth Regiment landed in France, and on July 3, 1917, the entire Fifth Regiment was under canvas on French soil.

During the journey to France the enemy had its first brush with the American Marine, when on June 22, 1917, at 10:15 p. m., the convey group, including the De Kalb, was attacked by enemy submarines. One of the torpedoes fired by the submarines went just astern of the De Kalb, while another passed slightly in front of the ship.

The De Kalb, the first to reach France, arrived at St. Nazaire on June 26, 1917, the Henderson on June 27, 1917, and the Hancock on July 2, 1917.

Then through various operations, we come again to June, with the Marines settled as the famous Fourth Brigade of the Second Division in 1918. Then history was written by the men of that famous Fourth Brigade, when during the first days of June, 1918, as something akin to a panic-seized Paris, when the Germans were advancing toward Paris, using the Marne River as a defensive flank as they steadily advanced toward their goal—the Second Division, then in reserve northwest of Paris and preparing to relieve the First Division, was hastily diverted to the vicinity of Meaux on May 31, and early on the morning of June 1, 1918, was deployed across the Chateau Thierry-Paris road near Montreuil-aux-Lions in a gap in the French line, where it stopped the German advance on Paris.

This fighting of the Second Division from May 31, to June 5 was part of the major operation called the Aisne defensive.

The close of the Aisne defensive on June 5, 1918, found the line of the Second Division well established at that point of the Marne salient nearest Paris, but not including Hill 142, Bois de Belleau, Bouresches, or Vaux, and the Germans were in possession of Chateau Thierry on the right of the Second Division, and continued to hold that town until June 17, 1918.

On June 6, 1918, the Second Division took the initiative from the enemy and started an offensive on its front that continued until July 1, 1918. During this offensive the Marine Brigade captured Hill 142 and Bouresches on June 6, 1918, and completely cleared Belleau woods of the enemy on June 26, 1918.

During this offensive the Second Division met with the most desperate resistance from some of the best troops of the German Army.

During these 31 days of fighting the Marines suffered battle deaths totaling 1,062 and casualties totaling 3,615.

The achievements of the Fourth Brigade of Marines were twice recognized by the French when they renamed Bois de Belleau, le Bois de la Brigade de Marine and when in French Army orders, the Brigade, the Fifth Regiment, the Sixth Regiment, and the Sixth Machine Gun Battalion were cited. And in the hearts of the French people, who realized that it was the Second Division thrown into the gap in the French line at Chateau Thierry that saved Paris from the steadily advancing line of the best troops of the German Empire, their lives an admiration for the American Marine that will never die.

And now June of our present year finds the Marines continuing to make history. You will find that on June 19, 1922, when the Marine Corps East Coast Expeditionary Force passed in review through the White House grounds before the President and his official family and friends, that it was the first time since the Civil War that a President has reviewed troops on the White House Grounds.

And this was but the start of a month of military maneuvers by the East Coast Marines, under Brigadier General Smedley D. Butler, that is considered the most extensive ever undertaken in the United States during times of peace.

This maneuver, embracing marches to and from Gettysburg, Pa., where, on the anniversary dates of that famous Civil War battle, parts of the engagements will be simulated by the khaki clad hosts from the Marine Barracks, Quantico, Va.

Do we wonder then why our own United States and the people of the allied nations hold the name "Marine" as the epitome of daring, courage, self-sacrifice, and resourcefulness?

What Will You Be Doing One Year From Today?

Three hundred and sixty-five days from now—what?

Will you still be struggling along in the same old job at the same old salary—worried about the future—never quite able to make both ends meet—standing still while other men go ahead?

One year from today will you still be putting off your start toward success—thrilled with ambition one moment and then cold the next—delaying, waiting, fiddling away the precious hours that will never come again?

Don't do it, man—don't do it.

There is no greater tragedy in the world than that of a man who stays in the rut all his life, when with just a little effort he could bring large success within his grasp.

Make up your mind today that you're going to train yourself to do some one thing well. Choose the work you like best in the list below, mark an X beside it, mail the coupon to Scranton, and we will send you, without cost or obligation, the full story of what the I.C.S. can do for you.

Right now you can decide where you will be in 1923.

Common sense will tell you that it is far better to send in this Success Coupon today than to wait another precious year and then wish you had!
